E. Coiera, 1998. (TIR)

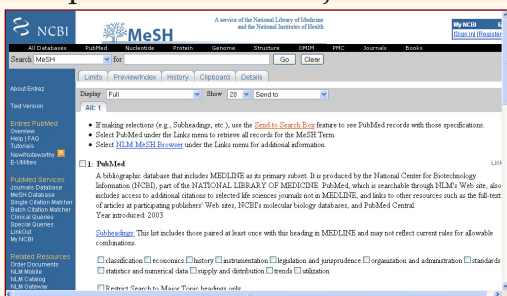

The computer, the telephone, the Web, video – these, and all that is still to come, are unquestionably powerful tools. Used badly, they waste time and money, and dehumanise our interactions with each other. Used well, guided by a clear understanding of basic informatics principles, they are neither to be feared, loved nor loathed. They are simply to be used.

In the next century, the study of informatics will become as fundamental to the practice of medicine as anatomy has been to the last.
